

DARING AND SUFFERING.

A History of the Andrews Railroad Raid Into Georgia in 1862.

The Most Heroic and Tragic Episode of the Civil War.

Embracing a Full and Accurate Account of the Secret Journey to the Heart of the Confederacy, the Capture of a Railway Train in a Confederate Camp, the Terrible Chase that Followed, and the Subsequent Fortunes of the Leader and His Party.

The expedition, in the daring of its inception, the resources of the men, the skill of the leader, and the overwhelming results it sought, was likely to obtain it in a comparatively unexplored territory.

Despite its tragic termination, it shows what a handful of brave men could undertake in America—CONDUCTED BY THE EDITOR OF THE CIVIL WAR IN AMERICA, Vol. 3, p. 187.

CHAPTER XXV THE ATTEMPT.

The last night that we ever spent together was a very quiet one. We sang our hymns, and then we talked late and thoughtfully. We were never so near again in this world, and the shadow of the separation was already upon us.

The next day we had long and tedious. At our usual camp we had to get up early, and we could do little but discuss the coming effort. We would not risk an attack in the morning for that night's rest, and we would have to search for it. It was far better to wait for evening, even if the day seemed well nigh endless. Slowly the sun rose up, and we were all up before the stars came out. Capt. Fry, who was tender hearted as a child, wept at the parting. He had two coats, and as he had immediate need for one, he passed the other to me. It was a wonderful boon, for I was nearly destitute of clothing. Everything that we felt ought to be taken we secured about us, so that we had the way of the coming struggle. We still had on hand a lot of books belonging to Rev. George Macdonell, who had sent them in but long before. I succeeded in getting them for me, and I carried them with me. At length the noise of shuffling feet and the voices of the colored women who carried in our provision was heard in the hall—a sound always welcome, for we were hungry enough to make the coming of our miserable dinner a great event. The door was opened, and the first thing I fastened in the daytime, and the food was handed in and the door locked as usual. The company moved on to give notice to the other prisoners.

and shots were being fired rapidly, while loud commands and screams were mingled. I feared that many of our number were or soon would be killed. Then I left the window and went to the door, where the prisoners of war were, and to my inexpressible surprise found that they had not gone out of their room at all. They said that they were not to be taken in that it would not be possible for any one to get off.

Parrott and Wiedick were captured in the prison yard and taken to the stocks. Bessinger, who had been so gallant in the struggle in the jailyard, had a fearful experience afterward. After the first race for the woods he discovered a group of men with dogs. For some three hours they pressed him sorely. He could get out of sight of the men, but the hounds would not stay, and he was forced to return. When wearied almost to death, he found a stream of water, and by running for a long distance in that direction he escaped. He was not seen again until he was found in the woods, where he was taken to the stocks. He was there for several days, and his sufferings were not lessened by the fact that he was not allowed to eat or drink.

The most lamentable part of the story was the case of Barlow, a young First Tennessee soldier, who volunteered to go with us. He was only 18, but brave and very amiable. No harm came to him in the fight, but in jumping down from the fence he broke his leg. He was taken to the hospital, and his leg was set. He was there for several weeks, and his sufferings were not lessened by the fact that he was not allowed to eat or drink.

During the day we hid, but some men came to look for us. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise.

Victory over the bloodhounds. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise.

Flight to the woods. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise.

Grandpa's barn. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise.

Lincoln's tender conscience. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise. We were very quiet, and we did not make any noise. We were very careful, and we did not make any noise.

What did you charge that man? I took said $250. "Lamon, that is all wrong. The service was worth what I gave; give him back at least half of it."

Two German inventors are credited with having devised an arrangement in the shape of an automatic electric alarm bell calculated to prevent the collision of two trains on same track. It is a most valuable invention, and it is now being used in many places.

A woman's discovery. "Another wonderful discovery has been made and that too by a woman in this county. Disease fastened its clutches upon her and for seven years she withstood its severest tests, but her vital organs were undermined and death seemed imminent. For three months she coughed incessantly and could not sleep. She bought of us a bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption and was so much relieved on taking first dose that she slept all night and with one bottle has been miraculously cured. Her name is Mrs. Luther Lutz." This was written by C. C. Hamrick & Co., of Shelby, N. C. Get a free trial bottle of Dr. King's New Discovery for Consumption.
